Re: APR Certification Scheme for Post-Consumer Plastic Recycling Process

Graham Packaging hereby declares its full commitment to compliance with the Association of Plastic Recyclers (APR) Certification Scheme for Post-Consumer Plastic Recycling Process.

Plastics are essential in daily life and in many industries. In a circular system, plastic waste is diverted from landfills, incinerators, and the environment by turning it back into useful materials. This includes using post-consumer recycled (PCR) plastics and mechanical recycling to process old containers into new raw material. Materials that have reached the end of their life can re-enter the supply chain as feedstock, reducing the need for new fossil-based resources.

To uphold this commitment, Graham has established robust systems, controls, and monitoring processes designed to ensure continued conformance to the requirements of APR's PCR certification. Additional measures include clear internal policies, regular audits, and employee training.

By maintaining these safeguards, Graham Packaging reaffirms its dedication to upholding the credibility of APR certification, protecting the integrity of sustainable supply chains, and ensuring continued trust with customers, partners, and regulatory authorities.
